As in water face answers to face, so here full moon awash in the autumn waters of the lake in the last, late ferry's wake answers to the moon's face: pale madonna. And you wavery shape in the still, unbroken waters of the womb, how you blink upward into the world—still blurred you gazing as if intent to see out, to find that lone, beloving face that peers down, suckles you with first and perfect light, then draws you, tidal, into the world.
