

Catherine Strisik

Bats In Trees At Midnight

In October, they saw what I was made of. Cervical vertebrae losing their curve and fluid, five generous folds, eyes weeping survival or helplessness. Where I slept, the mattress held my shape. Now they might settle for the night.